STUDYING AT MILAN

Lectures

- You can choose courses in English or Italian.
Personally, I chose only courses in English.
- The lectures are only theoretical (CM), with no practical sessions like at ENSGSI.
- However, in PLM, each lecture ends with an exercise.
- In Oil and gas, we do a lot of reviews from previous years with the teacher to practice.
- In Platform thinkings you have two hacktoons and Some company presentation
- In Knowledge management you have 3 review projects
- In Green logistic the half of lectures is a company presentation reception and intercultural adaptation

There is an integration week, one week before the first lectures

A group of erasmus ESN polimi organizes a party and meeting once a week and most trips in Italy

The culture is quite similar between Italy and France, we don't see a big difference like in some other countries, the food remains good, however many Italians don't speak English, so you need to have a little basic knowledge of Italian

- The rules are not clearly defined or are not repeated often. New information on the evaluation arrives late concerning the exams.
- The relationship to time is different. Italians are often late and don't respect fixed timetables very much. We often finish early. This contrast is particularly noticeable between Italian and German teachers, who start at really on times unlike the Italians.
- At first I had a bit of trouble with Tuesday and Wednesday with 8 hours of classes in a row
- You progress quite quickly in understanding English, and with the slides being quite clear, understanding the readings is quite easy.
